PRESIDENT WILL TAKE OLD FEDERAL RESERVE STOCK

Preparatory to Revaluing the Dollar; Sum Totals $3,600,000,000

NEXT MONETARY STEP

Fortified With Opinion By Cummings Executive Has Such Power

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 13.—President Roosevelt is preparing to take over the old stock of the Federal Reserve System amounting to some $3,600,000,000, preparatory to revaluing the dollar. Every indication pointed to this today as the next step in the working out of the administration's monetary policy. The White House has fortified with an opinion by Attorney General Cummings that the executive has the power to impound the gold without the necessity of going to Congress.

The dollar is now ranging from 63c and 64c measured in terms of foreign currency. Whether the revaluing will carry it down to 50c, the limit to which the President can go under the Thomas amendment, has not been made clear, but many observers believe this is the administration's ultimate goal.

If the dollar is sent down to 50c and the reserve system's gold taken over by the government, the treasury would have a neat profit of $3,600,000,000 in the revaluing process. Such a sum would be of unestimable value in the heavy refinancing which the government faces between now and June 30.

Samplers From European Countries Shown To Women

Samplers from various points in the United States, as well as many from England, Ireland, France, Germany, Holland, and a large one from Spain, were shown at the bi-weekly meeting of the Travel Club in the club home yesterday afternoon, when Mrs. Harold E. Gillingham, Germantown, spoke to the members and guests on "Samplers in Our Alley."

Mrs. Gillingham's paper proved most interesting, and during the course of the reading she told of humorous incidents connected with securing of some of the prized samplers. At the conclusion of her paper the visiting speaker gave the club women an opportunity to view the samplers. A number of the Bristolians also showed samplers which they had been invited to take to the session.

Miss Frances Landreth had charge of the afternoon program. She presented Mrs. Charles I. Bowen, who, garbed in colonial costume, sang "The Second Minuet" (Beasley). Mrs. Bowen later favored with "My Heart is a Haven" (Steinel). The piano accompanist was Mrs. Marburg D. Weagley.

A short business meeting followed the program, with Mrs. Horace H. Burton, president, occupying the chair. Mrs. J. E. W. Tracy and Mrs. Linton Martin were the hostesses.

Real Estate Board Meets And Names New Officers

The regular meeting of the Bucks County Real Estate Board was held at the Doylestown Inn, Doylestown, Wednesday, with 20 members in attendance.

Jacob H. Horn, Perkasio, the newly elected president, made appropriate remarks relative to his election to the office. Other officers to take their places for the year were: A. Paul Townsend, Jr., Langhorne, first vice president; Charles J. Happ, Doylestown, second vice president; William A. Rossiter, Jr., Langhorne, Secretary; Edward R. Kirk, Wycombe, treasurer.

The entire meeting was given over to the work of the Bucks County Publicity Committee which was sponsored by the Real Estate Board and now enjoys the distinction of having an office at 84 North Main street, Doylestown, Pa., in charge of Rachel Nice Knower, secretary.

An extensive drive for memberships is to be made within the next ten days and at such time business people in every section of the county will be asked to join the Association.

The work the Association is attempting to do and the advance of publicity for the county in all sections of the country will be of benefit to every business man in the county, it is argued.

The next meeting of the Real Estate Board will be held the second Wednesday in February at a place to be designated later.

Bensalem Taxpayers Meet And Discuss Twp. Affairs

EDDINGTON, Jan. 13.—Bensalem Township Taxpayers' Association met last night and the meeting was largely attended.

Numerous affairs were discussed and Philip Arnold, chairman of the Taxpayers' Road Board, requested an itemized account of wages paid to road workers in the township.

The Association authorized the secretary, Vernon K. Courtright, to file a complaint with the Bensalem Township School Board and Governor Pinchot, because of a refusal of the school board to permit the association to hold meetings in the school buildings.

The Association adopted a resolution to inquire why certain individuals held positions with the CWA.

Speakers lauded the work being done by Vernon K. Courtright in the interest of the association and stated that his efforts were untiring and much appreciated.

HERE AND THERE IN BUCKS COUNTY TOWNS

Richboro May Lose Street Lights Because of Delinquents

OTHER COUNTY NEWS

That Richboro may lose its street lights if the number of delinquent contributors among residents is not decreased was a fact considered at the annual meeting of the Village Improvement Association, held recently. Assessment payments by property owners have been steadily decreasing for several years and if continued will necessitate the removal of the lights, as occurred in a neighboring village, a short time ago, according to officials of the group who oversee the maintenance of street-lighting equipment for the electric company. A notice entitled, "Do we want the street lights to still burn," was made public through the committee's efforts.

Among other business at this meeting was the appointment of John F. Gill as collector of assessments to succeed T. Russell Lownes, he having been retained as treasurer. The officers who were re-elected are J. Milton Luff, president; Cameron Spencer, vice president, and J. Cooper Dungan, secretary.

Mrs. Uno Malstrom, who successfully conducted the Red Cross card parties last year, was unanimously elected president of the Morrisville Branch of the Red Cross at the annual meeting in the Community House.

Other officers elected are: Mrs. Wallace B. Richards, Mrs. Fred Ewald, vice-presidents; Mrs. Eric Donelson, secretary, and Mrs. William Burgess, treasurer.

In her annual report of the card parties, Mrs. Malstrom stated there had been nine afternoon parties and one evening party in 1933. A total of $167.05 was cleared.

Miss Agnes Rule, of the production department, reported more than 1,200 garments made and sent to Red Cross headquarters in Philadelphia. Mrs. Isaac Scott, Sr., reported more than 3,000 garments distributed last winter to the unemployed of Morrisville, and Mrs. Robert Stockham reported that since last October, 1,497 articles had been distributed. These garments included all kinds of clothing for men, women and children.

Mrs. James Klenk, chairman of the Roll Call committee, reported $423.27 collected in the recent membership drive. Mrs. Klenk added this sum was not as large as desired and she asked all those who have not been solicited to send their enrollment to her. Mrs. Klenk added that many persons were not at home when the workers called and others were not able to enroll at the time the solicitors called.

Mrs. Eric Donelson, chairman of the committee in charge of flour distribution, reported that during the year 2,201 bags of flour had been distributed, or a total of 53,900 pounds. She also reported that 260 more bags are expected in the very near future.

Miss Ida Ostrander, chairman of the Junior Red Cross, reported $29.71 raised and that many scrap books, menu cards and other articles had been made, and sent to the soldiers' and sailors' hospitals.

Winfield S. Donaldson, eighty-one, who for twenty-three years has been a clerk and bookkeeper with The Intelligence Company, died Thursday at 179 West Court street, the home of Mrs. Horace Ewer, where he had resided for some time. A heart attack caused his death.

Mr. Donaldson, who was one of Doylestown's best known citizens and who enjoyed a wide acquaintanceship in other parts of Bucks county, was on active duty in the business office of "The Intelligence" up until the day after Christmas. He had been failing for several months, but his devotion to duty kept him on duty until the past ten days.

The deceased was the son of George Donaldson, who at one time conducted a jewelry store in Doylestown. Mr. Donaldson came to "The Intelligence" from the Bucks County Republican in 1911 after many years of service on that newspaper.

Mr. Donaldson was active in fraternal.

ORCHESTRAL NUMBERS

EMILIE, Jan. 13.—The Emilie M. E. Epworth League presented a play, "The Road Back" by J. Carlton, at the Falsington Community House, Thursday evening. A string orchestra entertained before the play and between the acts, and Mrs. Edward Hillborn pleased with a piano solo.

The cast included: "Ma" Fowler, a bit lazy, Mrs. Leo Hibbs; "Pa" Fowler, rather timid, Nelson Simon; Jenny Fowler, the family "bank," Elsie Rockhill; Milly Fowler, manicurist, Helen Booz; Mrs. Blinders, a gossip neighbor, Alma Harris; George Fowler, the son; William Lovett; Arthur McLeod, a friend of Jenny, James Schoffstall; Blake Chester, in love with Milly, Victor Rockhill; Mr. Harrison, Jenny's employer, Leslie Craven; Ben Fowler, Pa's brother from Arizona, James Mertz; Mrs. Chester, Blake's mother, Dorothy Lovett.

The scene was the shabby living room of the Fowler home, present day, in a small eastern city. Blainville, Ma Fowler had a weak heart and rheumatic ankles and was addicted to eating much candy and reading trashy love magazines while Pa and the girls did the house work.

Jenny, the support of the family, had many worries on her mind. Milly, the manicurist, a slangy young woman, had a hard time convincing Blake's mother she would be a suitable wife for her son.

Mrs. Blinder, the gossip neighbor, felt it was her Christian duty to attend to all of her neighbor's family affairs and never seemed to understand the family meant it when each one but "Ma" told her to get out and not return. The many family difficulties ended happily however.

The participants were well chosen, and the play was directed by James Schoffstall.

BRISTOL MAN LOSES SUIT FOR DAMAGES

Jerry Pezzullo Sought Recompense for Injuries Alleged Sustained in Accident

SUING STATE POLICE

A verdict for the defendant was returned in court at Doylestown in the case of Jerry Pezzullo, Bristol, against Thomas B. Patterson. The case was tried before Judge Keller.

The plaintiff sought damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained in an automobile accident.

In another case of interest the tables are turned, a citizen is suing a State Policeman, and the "Arm of the Law," in a counter action, is suing Mr. and Mrs. Citizen.

Jacob B. Stone and his wife, Elva Stone, claim damages amounting to $150, and Corporal John R. Stewart, formerly of the Morrisville State Police barracks, claims damages amounting to $355.

Stone, a resident of Fallsington, and who is employed in a restaurant, taking the stand as the first witness, testified that he and his wife and two chow dogs were driving home from the place where he worked in their car on July 5, when they collided with a car driven by the State Policeman.

He told the court he was in the act of turning into his driveway near his home, when the collision took place. He stated he was driving on the right hand side of the road, but had to turn into the left-hand traffic lane in order to drive into the small lane.

He admitted drinking some near beer about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, but denied that he was under the influence of liquor when the accident happened about 6.30 that evening.

Upon the suggestion of Judge Boyer two small "toy automobiles"—a red and blue one—were used during the trial to indicate the position of the cars when the impact took place.

At the beginning of the trial, Howard I. James, counsel for the State Policeman, asked permission of the Court to make a motion wherein he stated that Corporal John R. Stewart is the plaintiff, and Mr. and Mrs. Stone the defendant.

Thus, the State Policeman is the plaintiff and Jacob B. Stone and Elva Stone, the defendants.

Henry Bellardo, Fallsington automobile mechanic, who repaired both machines, stated the damage done to the Stone car amounted to $150, while the bill for Corporal Stewart's car totaled $355.

Members of the jury included Mahlon Smith, Newtown, R. D. 1; Howard Carver, Holicon; Ethel Bishong, Doylestown; Ethel R. Molloy, Ivyland; Howard Rush, Doylestown, R. D. 1; Kate Seidel, Perkasio, R. D. 2; Edward Sherrer, Riegelsville; Herbert Frantz, Sherrington; Ernest E. Arthurs, Tinticum; Eton S. Badman, Quakertown; Michael Kelly, New Hope; Harry Bloom, Trevoze.

A jury on Thursday afternoon returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, the Penn Discount Corporation, of Philadelphia, vs. Anthony Nardicci, the defendant, in a replevin action. The verdict will entitle the plaintiff to the titles and possession of two dump trucks which were in dispute.

A jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendants in the case of J. George Phillips, of Philadelphia, against Marian Tomlinson and Winfred G. Phillips, tried in civil court before President Judge Hiram H. Keller.

The plaintiff sought damages for personal injuries inflicted in an automobile accident on the Bridgeton and Feasterville turnpike on Sept. 3, 1931.

The case of Louie Germ against Maria S. Twining and Swift and Company, an action in trespass, has been settled, it was announced today. The case of American Forest Products Company against Maria S. Twining and Swift and Company, has also been settled.

A DANGEROUS MOVE

Taxpayers will be fully justified in viewing with skepticism the new national plan of tax collection reported to be under consideration in Washington.

Although the purpose of it is said to be easing "the burden on the taxpayers," this excuse has been heard before in connection with new tax proposals, but the burden remains today greater than ever before. National, state and local taxes continue to mount despite the groans and protests of the public.

Under the new proposal, the Federal Government would collect all taxes on commodities and other things now taxed by Federal and State governments. Included in these are tobacco, gasoline, liquor, beer and income. The revenue thus collected then would be divided up among the Federal, state and local governments.

Reports dealing with the proposal do not make it plain just how the new system if adopted would benefit the taxpayer. Advocates of the proposal, however, will have little difficulty in advancing such reasons for it. Any new tax plan nearly always is pictured as intended to be helpful to the taxpayers, but such benefits seldom are realized. If taxes are cut at one point they usually are raised at another or a new source tapped. There would be no assurance under the Washington proposal that the state and local governments would reduce other taxes, and no matter how many unneeded millions might flow into the national treasury ways of spending it would be found instead of it being returned to the taxpayers in the form of lower rates.

The states have surrendered many of their rights and duties to the Federal Government. To turn over the collection of their taxes to Washington would be a dangerous step.

STAGNANT

The ultimate success of the present reconstruction program will depend upon a revival of a sound capital market. Virtually all financing of new construction today is being done by the government, a condition not at all healthy and reflecting the so-called emotional paralysis or stagnation which affects the public security market.

The stagnation in the long-term capital market is partly but not wholly due to anxiety arising from the new Federal securities act. New issues are not being offered even in the class exempt from the operation of the law, such as municipal and railroad issues or those of banks.

Responsible issuing houses or corporations do not object to supplying the public with all the information required by the law, but their anxiety is excited by some of the civil liabilities imposed upon issuers and underwriters of securities, as well as upon directors and officers of corporations.

These barricades against legitimate promotion and financing may be lowered by the present Congress, which has before it a number of amendments to the securities law it passed last spring. The bureau charged with the administration of the law concedes several weaknesses and defects in it and anticipates a flood of new stock issues once they are corrected.

The office cynic says the only crime in America consists in being a little fellow.

CHAPTER FIFTY-TWO

Patricia woke to that on the morning after the ball, woke to drifted newspapers, to piles of telegrams, to ringing telephones and frantic doorbells. Haverholt had not retired at all. He was unshaven and haggard, his white hair tousled; he was still in dinner clothes. He had spent the night with press agents and reporters, with eager representatives from a dozen smart hotels, with movie men and radio men. He was weary; he was exultant; he was riding high.

At ten, the house was cleared of visitors and reporters. At ten, when Patricia came downstairs, her arms full of newspapers, the living room was a wreck, piled with empty bottles, smelling of whiskey and stale smoke, littered with plates messy with scrambled eggs and bits of toast. Haverholt was at the telephone.

"Great," he was saying, "great. . . . An edition of fifty thousand copies wouldn't be half enough. Sure, it was all my own idea. . . . Old Massa Blair talked himself out on a limb and I sawed it off."

Haverholt banged down the receiver. The telephone rang again, promptly. Haverholt let it ring. He stretched, yawned luxuriously, eyed the girl who had hesitated in the doorway.

"Come in," he said, still stretching. "Gosh, I'm tired."

"This place," observed Patricia, glancing distastefully about the living room, "this place is certainly one grand mess."

"Newspaper men," observed Haverholt, "like their liquor. There was one man, a chap from the Blade, I swear he polished off a quart of rye and single handed too."

Remembering, he grinned. Instantly, he became grave.

"Blair is scared," Julian announced it pleasantly. "He's shaking in his boots. Did you see whom he picked for his partner?"

"I saw. You mean Horace Sanders?"

"I taught Horace all he knows about bridge," admitted Haverholt, although Patricia had not asked. Lighting a cigarette and expelling a long plume of smoke, he proceeded, "If Blair wasn't paralyzed with fear he'd choose an old-line player, an old fuddy-duddy like himself. It's going to be a circus to see him matched with Horace. Horace goes in for psychic bidding and Reuben hasn't the remotest notion of what a psychic is. Easy Pickings, Patricia, easy pickings for you and me."

The girl sat down. The telephone kept on ringing; the doorbell too was ringing. Julian talked on and on. He told her that a new printing of his red book, fifty thousand copies, was running off the presses. He told her that the storm of publicity was worth a million dollars to him, win, lose or draw—and he was bound to win. He told her several times that no bridge in the history of the world had ever approached the bridge he played. He explained the radio tie-up, explained that all America was watching him. His voice rolled on like the ceaseless surf and every third word was "I."

She herself, Patricia thought, seemed to have no part in his plans. He never mentioned her. Yet, she was scheduled to play in the match. For proof there was the pile of newspapers in her lap. The name was there in black and white, Patricia Haverholt, niece of the expert and an expert in her own right. Her own photograph was there, herself in the blue gown, herself on Haverholt's arm, smiling into the camera. Patricia Haverholt.

"What," cried the girl, suddenly angered by his obliviousness, "what about me?" As the man paused, she added in sudden bitterness, "Have you forgotten that I figure somewhere in this?"

"Why, my dear—"

"Don't you 'my dear' me! What are you going to do about me?" She snatched up a newspaper, shook out the crackling pages, so that the photographs were overmost. "What about that picture?"

Dozens of people knew that I'm not Patricia Haverholt, that I'm not your niece! Dozens of people who knew me as Patricia Warren will see that picture." She rattled off the names like hail. "My stepmother will see that picture. Eileen Syeott, Phil and Leda Kennedy, the grocer in my old neighborhood, the drug store man, dozens and dozens of people I used to know!"

She stopped for breath. Haverholt was frowning. He was sober enough now. He was not frightened, not as Patricia was. Still, he was obviously more nervous than he pretended to be.

"I thought of that," he admitted reluctantly. "I thought of that," he repeated.

"Oh, so you did spare me a thought," observed the girl ironically. "How very considerate of you."

"There's no use getting huffy," he suggested, worrying his lip between his teeth. "This means something to me," he reminded her with an anxious look. "I don't see how it could," he continued nervously, "but a scandal now might blow up the match. The sainted Reuben would pass out cold if he guessed at any irregularity in our relationship."

"What a fearful shame that would be!"

Irony was lost on Haverholt. He stood a moment in deep reflection, grinned all at once, and began with confidence renewed.

"Cheer up, Patricia. It can't make a bit of difference now. Reuben's hooked. He can't wiggle out. Patricia Haverholt or Patricia Warren, it's all the same. To the public now you stand for bridge. Even if some newspaper should stumble on the truth and print the facts, aside from some blue used fussing, you can't be hurt."

Patricia felt a sense of defeat and irritation. It was useless to hope that Julian Haverholt might see her side of it. Useless to hope that this man might consider a young girl's reputation as important as a bridge match. Perhaps it wasn't. Perhaps, she thought in sudden bitterness, perhaps Haverholt was right. After all, of what value was her reputation? What had it ever got her? Her good name had not made her happy. Why then should she fret and stew?

"Let's pray, Patricia," said Haverholt bracingly, "that your awful past does stay safely buried. I'll admit a resurrection might be a little awkward. Only a awkward, not fatal."

At that very instant, the butler appeared in the doorway, his usual decorous face obviously perturbed.

"A gentleman to see you, sir."

"I'm seeing no one," said Haverholt indifferently. "Tell him to come back this afternoon. I'm going to bed."

"You'll see me," broke in a savage voice that brought Patricia in terror from her chair.

The butler was bowed aside as a thick-set, swarthy, slick-haired man elbowed his way into the room. Bill McGee! Patricia saw him, saw the gun that he had fished from his pocket, saw the butler's terrified retreat.

"And who are you?" inquired Haverholt, coolly glancing at the weapon. He suggested, "You might put that gun away. They always make me nervous. Do you know this gentleman, Patricia?" he asked the girl.

She was too frightened for speech, McGee had seen her, was advancing, gun in hand.

"Get up, you ——" he snarled. "You're coming along with me!"

"You can't speak to my niece like that!"

"Your niece, is she?" demanded Bill, whirling upon the other man. He gave a sneering laugh. "You've lost your job as uncle then. She's going to be my niece now."

It happened with nightmare swiftness. His face as white as death, Julian sprang for Bill's throat. The gangster did not fire his gun. It was whirled from his grasp at the first wild charge. Julian's fist sent him sprawling across the room. As Patricia sank trembling, sobbing, to a chair, Haverholt collared the younger, stronger man and dragged him to the foyer.

With the butler's help he kicked him down the steps into the garden outside. It was the bums rush for Bill McGee.

As a final, ironic touch Julian picked up the fallen gun and hurled it through the door and to the lawn where McGee, dazed and shaken was just then crawling to his knees.

"And that," said Julian Haverholt, returning to the living room, "is the end of Bill McGee."

In which prophecy he was entirely wrong.

Life was moving fast, so fast. Patricia was torn a dozen ways at once. The bridge match and the arrangements pertaining to it filled her every waking minute. She was far too occupied these frantic, unrelaxing days for worry or for heartache. Except for the incident of Bill McGee, that incident that had been so pleasant a sop to Julian's vanity, there had been no echo from her past. If her stepmother, if Eileen Syeott or any of the old neighborhood acquaintances had identified the countless photographs of Patricia Haverholt as Patricia Warren, the girl herself had had no evidence of it.

She could not worry now. She had no time for brooding. Sometimes she thought of Clark but vaguely, as of some half remembered dream. Other times, in moods of weariness and despair, she knew that underneath the tumult and the shouting, the froth and the excitement there was a vacancy, a sense of bitter loss. There had been a word from Clark. Marthe was in and out the house, bright-eyed and flashing as some tropical bird, but even Clark's slow and memorable smile, his special gestures, the way he had said her name, these things would tug at Patricia's heart. Resolutely she would thrust them from her mind.

The bridge match must be got through. All else must yield to that. Just now to the girl, as to Julian Haverholt, the coming marriage was the most important thing in life. The living room was always jammed with people who talked of nothing else. Patricia must see to them, must offer tea or cocktails, must keep a thousand threads at her fingertips. Patricia dressed in her favorite shade of blue, serene and gracious, her red hair shining, as she smiled and listened or added her own little comment to the general bubble. Julian's hostess and his niece.

"A little beauty, isn't she?" "She'll take the prize on looks, all right. At that, I hear her bridge is good."

"Good! That girl's a wonder. She fills up all the holes in Julian's flashy game."

HOLLYWOOD—If the studio will let her off, Joan Crawford is keen to make a footlight appearance in Hollywood with Francis Lederer, the Czech-Slovakian star.

Joan was so enthused over the preview of "A Man of Two Worlds" that she joined the throng of fans and waited to congratulate Lederer.

When he came out of the theatre, later on, it was her own idea that they do a play together.

She read the script of "Autumn Crocus," in which Lederer opens here, but it offers no suitable part for her.

The idea is not abandoned, however. Both she and Lederer are reading plays to find the right vehicle. Once it is discovered, they will try to talk the studio into giving Joan a leave.

Meanwhile, by odd coincidence, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., is writing a motion picture story for the romantic Czech.

It is usually Cecil B. de Mille who coins the bon mots when talking to interviewers.

Edwin Schallert, local scribe, turned the tables neatly, however, when the two were discussing the decline of "sex" pictures.

"Yes," said Schallert, "the public is tired of staring at Lady Godiva; they want to see what the horse looks like."

The cunnie population of the Lupe Velez-Johnny Weissmuller ménage has been suddenly decimated.

The other day, Lupe called Johnny at the studio and bubbled excitedly that she had given away all the dogs but the two Chihuahuas and Johnny's police pup.

"STRANGLERS" LOSE TO SOUTHAMPTON QUINTET

By Jack Orr
(Asst. H. S. Publicity Agent)
Last night the "Strangers" of Bristol High School dropped a hard fought tilt to the Southampton quintet, 17-14, on the local high school court. This was the first league game of the season, and was close to the finish.

It was "Jim" Robinson, most valuable player in the Lower Bucks County League last year, who put the game on ice for the Blue and Gold. Captain Robinson was hurt three times during the fray and the final time, with three seconds left to play and the score 15-14 in Southampton's favor, "Rob" took the ball from the tap-off, dribbled through two Bristol players and sunk a one-handed shot as the gun boomed to end the game.

The first period was a great defensive canto as the local boys could not get started. They would bring the ball up and it seemed as if the basket had a lid on it. Doderer, of Southampton, hit the cords for two points, the only scoring done that canto.

The second period started with a bang. Spencer scored two field goals. Couch dropped in a gift throw for Southampton and "Moose" Fry sunk one under the basket as the half ended.

"Al" Gillespie, who had kept the visitors in the game all along, sank a two-pointer and a free throw as the second half started. Robinson was pushed, as he was shooting, and hurt badly, and he got a great hand as he resumed play and sank both of his fouls. Score, Southampton, 8; Bristol, 6. "Unc" Gallagher tied it up with a nice shot. Robinson was fouled again and he made the try as the period ended. Score, Bristol, 8; Southampton, 9.

Gallagher put Bristol ahead as the final period began, with a two-pointer. Gillespie retaliated with the same and followed up with another. Southampton, 15; Bristol, 10. Rue and Fry sank double-deckers to bring the game up to the colorful climax.

The Bristol boys played well and put up a great fight. It seems the only weakness of the Red and Gray is foul shooting. Last night not one was made in seven tries, which makes a total of four made in 23 tries in the last two games.

On Tuesday night the boys and girls will play Bordentown on the home floor.

HIGH SCHOOL GIRLS SCORE SECOND VICTORY

By Oscar Corn
(Asst. H. S. Publicity Agent)
The Bristol High sextet chalked up its second straight victory of the season when it easily took the Southampton lassies into camp by the score of 16 to 7. This tilt was played on the local floor, last night.

The Cardinal and Gray defense was outstanding during the entire game. This was made possible through the excellent guarding of Buck and Wiltshire. During the entire first half, these stellar guards prevented their opponents from scoring a single point. The Bristol High scores were repeatedly checked up, due to a good passing attack from center to forward. Nills, getting passes from Ensign, cut the cords many times, for twin-pointers.

The Southampton sextet was very slow in the first half, but in the latter part of the game they showed more fight and held Bristol to three points. The Cardinal and Gray team did not start its best line-up, and many substitutions were made. Buck and Ridge, guards, were put in as forwards in the second half, and both managed to score. Buck getting a double-decker, while Ridge shot a foul.

Nills was high point gatherer for the Cardinal and Gray, with a quintet of double-deckers and a foul, while Somers did all the Southampton scoring, getting a trio of twin-pointers and a foul.
